What to Expect and what to do when faced with loss

Grief reactions are unique to each person and can show up in different ways. In the time following a loss, what you may experience will change as you move through various ways of processing the loss. However, some common reactions include the following:

Emotions

Anxiety Shock Disbelief Numbness Anger Remorse Guilt Relief Resentment Helplessness Sadness Regret Loneliness Yearning Irritability Fear Overwhelmed Confusion

Physiological Reactions

Change in sleep Change in appetite Low energy Lowered immunity Aches in body
Dizziness
Di culty breathing
Increased heart rate

Behavioral Responses

Withdrawal Increased substance use Changes in responsibilities Di culty resting

Cognitive Changes

Di culty concentrating
Disinterest in school or typical activity
Confusion
Nightmares
Greater vigilance to possible threats
Intrusive images

Amongst all the changes and your grief reaction, some things that may be helpful to remember or practice include:

Do what's right for you. Go at your own pace. There is no one right to grieve, and you are allowed to feel whatever may come up. Avoid comparing your reactions to those of others.

Seek out social supports and spend time with others. You may be surprised at the support and shared sense of loss that can be felt with others impacted. Being around others will also mitigate possible feelings of loneliness.

Remember that grief is of & DC BT. Xp 4 m & n-4 king (en-5) MCD & DC B & Witigou ms will ag Opos

- Express and release your emotions (talking, journaling, crying, art). Intense and varied emotions are normal in the face of loss, and when expressed and directed, these feelings can help process and cope with grief.
- Reach out to your faith or spiritual connection. Being able to make meaning from a loss or connect to a faith-based understanding of what happens after loss can help in accessing supports and processing the loss.
- Maintain healthy eating and activity levels. Continuing to engage in routines to maintain your health is important for giving your body the energy and resources necessary to handle the aftere ects and changes in your life as a result of a loss.
- Refrain from judging others' responses. Recognize that whether you tend to seek active support from others when faced with issues, or tend to consider things on your own, it's important to respect others' perspectives and provide support-1.1seyidenc7@82.3 T&panT

